Where are you on the path to college?

Making yourself competitive for college admissions can seem a little daunting. But if you plan ahead, you can make the process more manageable—and successful. Here’s a timeline to help you get started.

Freshman Year
- Get involved. Discover your interests and talents by taking part in extracurricular activities.
- Challenge yourself. Take prerequisite academic courses that you’ll need for future AP and honors courses.

Sophomore Year
- Take the PSAT. The October PSAT is a great way to introduce yourself to the test before it really counts.
- Be a leader. Aim for leadership roles in your extracurricular activities.
- Ready for more tests? Take the AP or SAT Subject Tests as you complete the relevant coursework.
- Prep for the next PSAT. Take advantage of the slower summer months to prepare.

Junior Year
- Take the PSAT. This time it counts—and a high score can mean a National Merit Scholarship.
- Stay focused. Colleges pay close attention to your grades in junior year.
- Build your college list. Make a list of target schools and find out their application requirements.
- Prep for the SAT & ACT. Analyze your PSAT performance and start your prep for the high-stakes SAT and/or ACT.
- Take the SAT & ACT. The main event—get the high score you need now and get the tests out of the way.
- Hit the road. Use the summer to visit your target schools and complete applications.

Senior Year
- Need a re-take? Take the SAT or ACT again if you don’t have the scores you need.
- Prep for Subject Tests. Take any Subject Tests that are required for your college applications.
- Line up recommenders. Request letters of recommendation from people you trust.
- Complete applications. Complete and send any remaining college applications.
- Complete the FAFSA. This form determines your eligibility for government financial aid.
- Finish campus visits. Visit the rest of your target schools.
- Sit by the mailbox. Relax, you’re going to get accepted to a great school.
- Make your decision. Review your responses and decide which school best fits your goals, personality, and lifestyle.
- Celebrate. You worked hard; you deserve it!
